

in that community on Friday of this week. Private burial will take place at a later time.

Mr. Elliott was born on December 2, 1924, in Statesville, North Carolina, son of Frank W. and Lois Young Elliott. He married Evaughn "Bonnie" Close on January 7, 1950, at Rapid City, South Dakota. His wife survives him. He is also survived by two sons, Frank Elliott of Santiago, Chile; Jeff Elliott of Albany, Georgia; and a brother, Jim Elliott of North Carolina, along with five grandchildren in whom he took great pride and affection.

General Elliott graduated from high school in 1941, and he attended college in California and in North Carolina, before he enlisted in December of 1942 in the U.S. Air Force. He later did complete his college work at Charleston, Illinois, at Eastern Illinois University in 1973.

He completed pilot's training and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in March of 1944. He completed a tour of combat duty as an air crew commander of B-24s with the 15th Air Force in Italy during April of 1945, and he was promoted to Captain in that same year.

General Elliott remained in the service after World War II. He served in a number of different capacities, in operational supply and aircraft maintenance positions, until 1963 when he was promoted to the grade of Colonel while serving as the Deputy Commander for an operations wing of B-52s based in California.

He has attended the War College right here in Washington, D.C. General Elliott commanded the 92nd Bomb Wing at Fairchild Air Force Base in Washington from January 1969 to January 1970, when he was promoted to Brigadier General. He was the commander of the 14th Strategic Air Division at Beale Air Force Base, California, and from 1970 to July of 1971, he was assigned to the Air Force base in Thailand as Commander of the 307th Strategic Wing.

General Elliott was promoted to Major General and then as Commander of the Chanute Technical Training Center at Chanute, Illinois, which brought him into Illinois again, and into the 15th Congressional District. He served there with distinction. He retired from the Air Force in September of 1975 after completing 33 years of active service.

Later, after a few years of retirement, we were so pleased when General Elliott returned to Rantoul to serve as an economic development consultant to the Village of Rantoul. This was at a time when the community of Rantoul was quite fearful. There was a great deal of concern in the community because the Chanute Air Force Base was being closed under the base closure passed by this Congress. A large number of jobs were being lost to the community.

General Elliott was a man for all seasons, a man who came to the rescue of his adopted community. He served them well. He will be greatly missed. I am glad to come here tonight to put this in the RECORD for his memory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BRADY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. FROST addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

IN HONOR OF THOMAS HENDRICKS, ONE OF THE LAST LIVING BUFFALO SOLDIERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARRETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute to an outstanding member of my community and one of the last surviving Buffalo Soldiers of the United States Army, Mr. Thomas Hendricks. The story of Thomas Hendricks and his fellow Buffalo Soldiers who served before him will forever be a significant part of the history of America.

The legacy of the Buffalo Soldiers dates back to post Civil War days. Although African Americans have fought with distinction in all of this country's military engagements, their future in the Army was even in doubt after the Civil War. In July 1866, however, Congress passed legislation establishing two cavalry regiments and four regiments of infantrymen, later merging two, whose composition was made up entirely of black soldiers.

The troopers of the 9th and 10th Cavalries developed into two of the most distinguished fighting units in the Army. The fierce fighting techniques of these soldiers and their bravery on the battlefield inspired Native Americans to call them Buffalo Soldiers. Although history has often overlooked the contributions of the Buffalo Soldiers, I am proud to salute one of its finest cavalrymen, Thomas Hendricks. He is a man of courage and wears the name Buffalo Soldier with honor and great pride.

Thomas Hendricks was born on February 14, 1920, in Evanston, Illinois. As a young boy, he was strongly influenced by his grandfather, James Hendricks, who was also a Buffalo Soldier and served our country with distinction. It was actually his grandfather who inspired him to become a Buffalo Soldier and carry on the legacy of the hundreds of thousands of African Americans who have given their lives for the sake of freedom in our country.

Thomas Hendricks joined the 10th Cavalry of the U.S. Army in 1938 as a volunteer after receiving extensive military training under the tutelage of his grandfather. A few years later, he was sent to Ft. Hood for training and went on to pursue a distinguished military career which extended more than a decade.

Throughout his career as a Buffalo Soldier, Tom Hendricks has received numerous honors, including Battle Stars, for his valiant efforts in World War II. He was engaged in military conflicts including the Normandy Invasion and the Battle of the Bulge. Although much has changed since the days of the Buffalo Soldiers, including the integration of all military servicemen and women, the story of Tom Hendricks and his fellow Buffalo Soldiers who served before him will remain one of great patriotism and unsurpassed courage.

I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting Thomas Hendricks for his accomplishments as a Buffalo Soldier. We owe him a tremendous debt of gratitude for his service to our country, and we should all be proud of his contribution to our Nation's military history.

BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the special order organized by my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO] and the gentleman from California [Ms. ESHOO] and others to salute October as Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

We all know too well the devastating facts. With nearly 200,000 cases of breast cancer diagnosed last year, breast cancer is the most common cancer among women. I was pleased earlier this year that Congress enacted, as part of its balanced budget, my bipartisan bill, the Breast Cancer Early Detection Act, to allow for annual mammograms for Medicare women. This bill was first introduced in 1992 along with Barbara Vucanovich, who is herself a survivor of breast cancer.

We were very pleased that it was included in the balanced budget this year. It certainly makes a very wise investment that will save women's lives. But there is much more that needs to be done.

Once breast cancer is diagnosed, sometimes it is too late. But sometimes when treatment is available, a woman can undergo a mastectomy which may save her life. Unfortunately, very often we have seen women who have been forced to leave the hospital with drainage tubes still attached and just like the drive through delivery bill, a national outcry forced us to look at the safety of women who were sent home hours after a radical mastectomy.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of H.R. 135, the Breast Cancer Patient Protection Act. This bill will eliminate the so-called drive-through mastectomies by requiring insurance companies to provide at least 48 hours of inpatient hospital care following a mastectomy, and a minimum of 24 hours following a lymph node dissection for the treatment of breast cancer.

I am also very proud to be a cosponsor of H.R. 164, the Reconstructive Breast Surgery Benefits Act, introduced by my colleague and friend, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. ESHOO]. This bill would require health insurance companies to cover reconstructive breast surgery, if they already pay for mastectomies. I am pleased to stand with my colleagues in support of the one out of every eight women who will get breast cancer in her lifetime.

Right now thousands of women are signing an electronic petition. The online petition drive will enable breast cancer patients to become activists on behalf of this legislation that would provide them with the kind of health care they deserve.

Many have shared their personal stories. One New York woman wrote, and I quote, "On August 25 of this year, I learned that I did have breast cancer. A further study showed that the cancer had traveled to my bloodstream. I am 34 years old. I am undergoing chemotherapy and will also have radiation. It is absolutely necessary for you in government to help women all across the country and to take this disease seriously. We depend on our government to protect us, even when a devastating illness has befallen us."

I quote from another letter. I would like to put a series of them in the RECORD. Quoting, "I was not in any high risk group for developing breast cancer. Yet I was diagnosed with breast cancer in November of 1996. I was shocked and it is still very hard for me to accept this diagnosis. I opted for a mastectomy. I am still in the process of reconstructive surgery. I thank government. You must do more to help women like me."

Mr. Speaker, we need to make sure mastectomies and reconstructive surgery are safe and covered. I thank my colleagues for organizing this special order tonight and I salute the women who are facing these issues every day. You are our inspiration and we will continue fighting for you.

REFORM OF THE IRS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss an issue that has received quite a bit of attention over the last couple of weeks and months. However, many have raised concerns about this for a period of time.

Today, however, I think we can bring this discussion to a higher note in a bipartisan manner that reflects greater interest in saving the voluntary tax-paying system that we have in this Nation, but as well, acknowledging that there have been serious problems that have plagued the Internal Revenue Service as perceived by taxpayers in the variety of stories that they have been able to share with Congress on this very point.

I felt compelled to address this question in my own district, for it is one thing to hear of a national outcry. It is extremely important to allow your constituents to share their own individual cases that may have occurred.

Not one single witness got up and wanted to declare the abolishment of the IRS or to say that they no longer wanted to share the responsibility of this great government, the government that provides with national security your protection, provides for public education, the safety of our air and water, that provides for our national law enforcement, the beautiful national parks and monuments that we appreciate, the protecting of this capital. Citizens to a one concluded that they wanted to be part of this government and part of supporting it.

But each of them could recount for me an unfortunate set of circumstances that made them feel intimidated and unable to deal with addressing their problems of questions about the taxes that they paid or were alleged to have not paid.

In particular, let me honestly say in this hearing that I held on Friday, October 17th, many citizens and constituents that I asked to participate or suggested that they might were, in fact, frightened and intimidated and did not want to come forward for fear of being targeted. That is not the kind of agency we would like to have.

Let me say in defense that representatives of the IRS employees union also came forward and mentioned the many good and dedicated and sincere employees that want to work within the bounds of the law, want to work with taxpayers and want to ensure that that kind of intimidation does not exist.

With that hearing behind me, I thought it was extremely important to compliment the process today of a bill marked up in the Committee on Ways and Means and offer my own legislation, entitled the Taxpayers Justice Act of 1997. I focus on justice for taxpayers.

I agree with those who are supporting elimination of the marriage tax penalty. My bill includes that. We should encourage those who are married, live together, support families and pay taxes. Why should they be penalized because they are not single?

I also support the creation of civil and criminal penalties for IRS employees who work outside the bounds of their job description and scope, who harass or intimidate taxpayers, do not give them a chance to explain their situation.

I am supporting a two-year commission to help simplify the Tax Code so that we are not going through mounds and mounds of paper, some 9000 pages of the Tax Code. That simply cannot be.

I am also interested in creating a taxpayers advisory board of real, plain, average taxpayers, not the major giants across the Nation, but just the average citizen who, every day of their life, is trying to comply with the laws of this land.

I want to eliminate potential discrimination, job discrimination at the IRS, and potential discrimination of those who may be targeted because of race, sex or ethnic origin or religion or origin to be audited. I also want to be assured or assure divorced women whose incomes are less than their spouses that they are not penalized with the taxes of past mistakes in marriage so that there is some protection for them. And, yes, rather than rushing a taxpayer to the courthouse where their resources are exhausted, I would like to see the utilization of mediation and dispute resolution so that taxpayers and the IRS can sit down and attempt to resolve their differences. There is some form like that, but it is not where it is moved in a direction that reinforces the taxpayer that this is the right thing to do, to sit down in mediation.

Overall, we have a good system that supports this government. But whenever you call a hearing on the IRS and your constituents run the opposite direction rather than come to the table to provide insight and information, you know you have a problem. The Taxpayers Justice Act of 1997 is to compliment the Act of the Committee on Ways and Means, but also to address your concerns, that of the taxpayers of this country who need justice.

I hope Members will support the Taxpayers Justice Act of 1997.

BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I join my Democratic colleagues this evening in a series of special orders during Breast Cancer Awareness Month to discuss what we should do in this Congress and in communities across the country to prevent and to cure this dreadful disease of breast cancer.

Recently, at a breast cancer awareness forum at the Elyria, Ohio WYCA, a woman recounted the story of holding her ailing mother's hand as she was wheeled down a sterile hospital hallway to a surgical room where she was to receive a lifesaving mastectomy. Another breast cancer survivor shared with us the emotional toll this deadly disease took on her and her loved ones.

This type of meeting to promote awareness and education about this deadly disease is not an unfamiliar sight in the industrial communities I represent in northeast Ohio. A study conducted by the Ohio Department of Health estimates that one in three women in Ohio will develop some form of cancer in their lifetimes and one in nine women will develop breast cancer.
